About Alpha Delta Gamma National Fraternity

ADG is a national Catholic social fraternity founded at Loyola University of Chicago in 1924. The fraternity currently has eleven active chapters and one colony located at universities throughout the United States. Influenced by the teachings of St. Ignatius Loyola, ADG's founders envisioned five areas of development for male college students – spiritual, scholastic, service, school spirit, and social – the Christian ideals of true manhood, sound learning, and genuine brotherhood. The fraternity's guiding principle is that the highest and noblest form of manhood is to be a man for others rather than a man just for oneself.
